The long term goal of this proposal is to define the roles of selective estrogen receptor modulators (SERMs) in the development of human endometrial cancer. It is believed that SERMs prevent cancer by mimicking the mitogenic action of estradiol and thus inhibit cancer-cell proliferation. However, a recent clinical trial reported by Wyon J. A. et al., "Efficacy of tamoxifen in early-stage breast cancer," N Engl J Med 304:837-844, 1981, demonstrated that tamoxifen induced an increase in the incidence of endometrial cancer in postmenopausal women. We have found that estradiol-17beta (E2) stimulates the proliferation of human endometrial cancer cells and that tamoxifen induces an increase in the growth of these cells in a concentration- and time- dependent manner. Moreover, the stimulation of the growth of endometrial cancer cells by estradiol can be antagonized by tamoxifen. However, estradiol also stimulates the growth of human endometrial stromal cells. Thus, it is possible that the combination of estradiol and tamoxifen stimulates both endometrial cancer and stromal cells, and induces the growth of endometrial cancer. In order to examine the growth-regulatory action of tamoxifen on human endometrial cancer cells, we propose to investigate the mechanisms of tamoxifen's stimulation of the growth of endometrial cancer cells. We propose to examine the role of estrogen receptors in the growth of endometrial cancer 82157476af
